

Staten Island Railway Limited Service

Staten Island Railway was devastated by Hurricane Sandy,
however we continue to advance
toward normal service

The St. George Terminal signal system experienced extensive water damage. In addition, other stations have been affected by the ongoing power outages on Staten Island. As a result, train operation at St. George Terminal is severely affected as we only operate trains on two of the tracks. Customers will experience significant delays arriving and departing the Terminal. Customers are advised to begin travel earlier and allow additional travel time. The Staten Island Railway cannot guarantee timely connections with the Staten Island Ferry.

As of 10 AM, Saturday, November 3, 2012 until further notice, the following limited weekend and weekday Staten Island Railway service is scheduled to be in effect:

This weekend (Nov. 3 and 4), trains run every hour between St. George Terminal and Tottenville.

No weekday express service in the AM and PM rush hours.

During AM and PM weekday rush hours, trains run every 15 minutes to coincide with ferry departures and arrivals.

During off-peak hours trains run every 30 minutes.

As extensive work needs to be done to restore normal service out of St. George Terminal, we anticipate that full service will not be restored for approximately 16 weeks. Please be assured that we will be working around the clock to restore service. We appreciate your patience and understanding.
